

WOMEN AT WHITE HOUSE ORDERED TO REMOVE HATS

Roosevelt Holds First Official Reception of the Winter Season.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Diplomats from every country represented at Washington last night paid their respects to President Roosevelt at what was really the first State entertainment of the season. Diplomats who refrained from appearing in uniform at the New Year's reception made their appearance garbed in all the glory of their offices. Their glittering uniforms with the exquisite gowns of the women made a scene unlike that at any of the other receptions of the year.

Several women attended the reception wearing hats, and were half way up the grand staircase on their way to the blue room when a policeman turned them back with instructions to remove their hats. They did so and were permitted to proceed to the upper floor.

The reception began at 9 o'clock and was over in a little more than an hour. President Roosevelt greeted the visitors cordially and took his time with each.

Baron Mayor des Planches, the Italian Ambassador, was the first to be received, and his associates followed in the order of their rank. James Bryce, the British Ambassador, was in a gorgeous uniform, and remained until almost the last guest had departed.

FIGHTING FOR HER CHILDREN'S RIGHTS

Mrs. Mulry, Who Divorced Her Husband, Objects to His Mother's Will.

Mrs. Lucy Mulry, who divorced Dr. Lawrence V. Mulry, of Brooklyn, applied to Justice Newburger in the Supreme Court to-day for permission to intervene in behalf of her five children in a suit brought by John A. Monahan against the estate of her mother-in-law, Eliza Mulry, who died in Ireland in March, 1906, to recover on two promissory notes of $20,000 and $25,000 under the old lady's will.

Mrs. Eliza Mulry died on an estate bought for her by Dr. Mulry. Monahan was her son-in-law, but his wife divorced him several years ago, contrary to the wishes of her mother, who married Harold Swain, an attorney. Thomas M. Mulry, Thomas F. Mulry and Joseph M. F. Egan are her executors.

The old lady had retained her divorced son-in-law, Monahan, as manager of her business affairs, and her will contained this paragraph: "I direct my executors to pay to my son-in-law, John A. Monahan, $25,000, the amount of my written acknowledgment to him in consideration of his valuable services to me and my late husband for many years past. For many years he has been a faithful, loyal and true friend."

The two notes bear dates in 1904. Eliza Mulry's will directed that her residuary estate be divided into five parts, for her five children, that of Dr. Lawrence V. Mulry to be held in trust during his life, and then to be distributed among his children.

Mrs. Lucy Mulry sued her husband and the estate a year ago and secured judgment of $20,000 due her in unpaid alimony, and this sum was declared by the Court to be a first lien upon Dr. Mulry's income from his share of the estate.

In her petition to be allowed to intervene as a defendant, Mrs. Mulry's suit Dr. Mulry's wife declares that Monahan is not entitled to the $25,000 claimed by him, and that it was taken from the estate of his children would ultimately lose by it.

Decision was reserved.

Boston Orchestra Plays a New Symphony Brilliantly

It is by Hermann Bischoff, of Munich—Teresa Carreno, Soloist, in a MacDowell Piano Concerto.

D. R. KARI, MUCK, at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Concert in Carnegie Hall, last night, directed a fine performance, for the first time in New York, of a symphony in E major, by Hermann Bischoff, a disciple of the modern German revolutionary school of music. It is not easy, after only one hearing, to form a positive opinion of the value of the work. The orchestration is remarkable, a bit noisy if you will, but of expert workmanship. The inspiration of Wagner is manifest, and once there is a striking resemblance in rhythm and treatment between Bischoff's "Carnival" overture, which was also on the programme. Nevertheless, in the main, it is original and melodious. The first movement is delightfully novel and stirring, the scherzo is captivating and the whole composition served last night to keep the faculties on the edge of anticipation. It was no easy thing to play, but Dr. Muck's men surmounted all the difficulties and gave the work a superb exposition.

Teresa Carreno played the solo part in MacDowell's piano concerto No. 2, in D minor, with all her triumphant assurance and skill and charm. She was recalled many times. In this work and in the Dvorak overture the orchestra maintained the brilliancy of its playing. After the scherzo in the symphony Dr. Muck called upon all his men to stand in acknowledgment of the prolonged applause.

The house was crowded and representative both of art and fashion.

"AIDA" CHARMS AGAIN

AT THE MANHATTAN

A repetition of "Aida" at the Manhattan Opera-House last night drew a fairly large audience that heard and saw an excellent performance of Verdi's great opera. Agostinelli had the title part, which she filled acceptably. Bassi was Radames, singing with less show of timidity than at his last few performances, and acting most convincingly. De Cisneros was a strikingly handsome Amneris, and she sang with an opulence of voice that was remarkable to the few who knew that behind the scenes after each act she was in the hands of a physician, who was treating her for influenza. Ancona as Amonasro, and Arimondi as Ramfis, helped to maintain the general excellence of the cast.

Campbell conducted with an awing that kept principals, chorus, ballet, musicians and the whole production up to a high level of excellence.
